

One follow-up email

Input: one rough sales or client-call note. Output: subject line, client-ready email, and one next-step sentence.

Rough note received maya / riverstone dental wants implant consults, not random emergency leads old agency sends leads but front desk follows up late missed calls are messy

asked about audit + paid search cleanup send reply, ask for 60d lead export propose 14-day sprint confirm who owns same-day follow-up

Client-ready follow-up email

Subject: implant consult follow-up
Maya, thanks again for today's call. The main issue sounds like lead quality plus same-day follow-up, not just ad spend. The clean next step is for Riverstone to send the last 60 days of ad, call, and lead outcomes. I will review where implant consults are dropping and return a 14-day cleanup plan.
If that works, please send the export by tomorrow at 2 PM and confirm who owns same-day follow-up internally.

Why this is useful

ROUGH INPUT	CLEAN EMAIL DOES
"wants implant consults"	Names the real business goal.
"front desk follows up late"	Turns the problem into an owner check.
"ask for 60d export"	Makes the evidence request specific.
"propose 14-day sprint"	Turns a vague pitch into a next step.

Optional internal note

FIELD	VALUE
Outcome	Follow-up email ready to paste.
Next action	Send export request and owner check.
Risk	Do not change spend before checking lead quality and follow-up speed.

RelayBrief turns one rough call note into one follow-up email. This example uses invented data.
